

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Paul, Weiss Adds Life Sciences Transactions Partner in San Francisco

New York and San Francisco, August 7, 2026 — Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison LLP announced today that Ian Edvalson has joined the firm in San Francisco as a partner in the Corporate Department focused on life sciences transactions. Edvalson advises public and private biopharmaceutical, medtech and life sciences companies on the full range of transactions that support the development and commercialization of their products and services, including license and collaboration agreements, IP aspects of M&A transactions and other commercial agreements.

“Ian’s work across the entire spectrum of life sciences transactions will be incredibly valuable to our clients as we continue to support them on their most complex deals and commercial agreements in the sector,” said Angelo Bonvino, global head of the Paul, Weiss Corporate Department. “We are thrilled to welcome him to the firm.”

“Ian brings a stellar track record of providing the sophisticated counsel that life sciences companies need to execute pivotal transactions, including licensing and collaboration agreements,” said Jeffrey Osterman, global co-head of Intellectual Property & Technology Transactions and chair of Life Sciences Licensing & Collaboration Transactions at Paul, Weiss. “He is a terrific lawyer whose commercial and strategic approach will strengthen our growing IP practice.”

Edvalson has been recognized by Chambers USA for Life Sciences: Corporate/Commercial – California since 2021 and previously from 2007 to 2014. He earned a B.A. in Korean and B.S. in Molecular Biology from Brigham Young University, and a J.D. from the University of Chicago Law School.

The Paul, Weiss Intellectual Property & Technology Transactions Practice brings together corporate lawyers with technical and legal expertise across all types of IP asset classes, and a strong understanding of how IP assets fit into the overall deal structure. The firm leverages this knowledge to address our clients’ critical intellectual property needs, devising transactional strategies to identify opportunities and unlock the hidden value of intangible assets.
